

Andrew Schoultz's "Destroyer" at Mark Moore Gallery

SEPTEMBER 19, 2012 by MEGAN KOESTER

Mark Moore Gallery is thrilled to announce the completion of Andrew Schoultz's first Los Angeles-based public mural, "Destroyer" (2012). Created specifically for the West-facing exterior wall of the gallery, "Destroyer" features the artist's trademark frenetic whirlwind of military horses, crumbling walls, and iconic flags.

ANDREW SCHOULTZ, DESTROYER, 2012

Finished in just six days, the mural exemplifies Schoultz's mastery of intricate compositions on a grand scale. With other existing solo murals in Miami, San Francisco, Indonesia, and Toronto, Schoultz's inaugural L.A. fixture makes for his eighth major public work. The project was carefully followed by such publications as Cartwheel Art and Juxtapoz Magazine, both of which highlight the mural's content as a potential foreshadow to Schoultz's upcoming January (2013) solo exhibition at the gallery. On the heels of the Museum of Contemporary Art, San Diego's acquisition of Schoultz's work for its permanent collection, the mural has already been met with much praise and many visits.
